The U. S. National Health Survey states in its report on current statistics on respiratory diseases for the week ended December 7 (Report No. 9) that "special tallies of cases reported in the sample for the period July-October showed that during those months the incidence of new bed cases of the acute upper respiratory diseases was highest in the age group 5-19 years. Among people in this age range there were 40 new cases per 1,000 persons per week. The children under 5 years of age had the next highest rate, with 28 new cases per 1,000 persons per week. Persons over 65 years of age least frequently affected, at a rate of 9 new cases per 1,000 persons per week. The rate for the age group 20-64 was 16 new cases per 1,000 persons per week."
